"THE SCARLET LETTER."

It is impossible to paint a mental analysis on canvas or to buy psychology at so much per pound from a dramatic agent. Therefore the task of dramatizing Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter"-which means arranging an elaborate mind-study into acts and acenes coust necessarily be a very heavy one. In itawthorne's wonderful book the incidents of his story are merely the framework for a picture of sin's effect upon sensitive. Puritan mind. The fact that Arthur Dimmesdale died upon the scaffol clasping Hester Prynne and little Pearl in his arms, is not of so much importance as the gradual mental process by which he reached that position. In the book Hawthorne lays a great deal of stress upon the fatal association of the minister and the leech, the latter un dermining insidiously the mind of the former and paving the way for an awith and fear fully premeditated revenge. This is only just alluded to in the play. Hester Prynne mentions it, and mentions it too late. In reality, it is the whole subject matter of the story.

Hints for Marketers.

When buying meat it is well to remember that beef contains the most nutriment to the pound of any meat. The expensive cuts are o more putritious than the cheaper ones, and a pound of bolling meat at eight cents answers as well the purpose of nutrition as a porterhouse at 18, and when properly prepared will be relished as much by the grow ing members of the family. Fad of the Oil Bath.

One of the fads of the day is an oil bath Cottolene or cottonseed oil is the most approved medium. A woman accustomed to he business makes engagements at one of the fashionable cottage colonies to officiate each day as a rubber for a considerable consideration. For giving softness to the skin and also that firmness of texture so much to be desired there is nothing better than oil, says the Baltimore News. The quantity needed for the exploit is very small, for no one takes a plunge bath in the lubricants unless it be one of the Persian young ladies anxiously flattering herself to be fair in the eyes of her Mustapha-rut-a-dud-kell-kahn. But the independent young woman who is her own bather and rubber has the pest of it, for she can choose her own time for the process, and, by saving the cost of a professional rubber, she can afford to use a more expensive unguent, f. c., that famous mixture of lanoline and cocoa butter, which is so readily absorbed by the skin as to underline it with fat and give is the texture of a magnolia petal.

Little Dorothy was tired, oh, so tired, as she knelt at her mamma's knee and tried to say her prayers, as she did every night. She was no tired that her dear little head was heavy, and the lights made blurs before her eyes and the room seemed going in a whirl like a merry-go-cound.
